REAL INTERNATIONALIST

ARISTOTLE SOCRATES ONASSIS, the fabulous shipping magnate, was in the news recently when it was reported he had acquired a monopoly on the distribution of Saudi Arabian oil.

Sometime before that his name was in the headlines when it was announced he had purchased the casino at Monte Carlo.

Mr. Onassis was born in Smyrna, Turkey, of Greek parentage. His ships fly the Panamanian flag. He lives in Paris, but is a citizen of Argentina. These facts are pertinent, since Mr. Onassis is at the point of becoming involved in a war, in addition to his other activities.

Not content with his $300-odd millions, Mr. Onassis is sending a squadron of his ships to fish for tuna in waters from which, until now at least, Peru has barred all competition, including the venturesome Norwegians. The Onassis ships are armed, and may pose a real challenge to the Peruvian Navy which is made up of two 1906 light cruisers and six gunboats.

The tuna waters at issue are 200 miles off the coast of Peru, which seems a bit far to be claiming offshore ownership. Moreover, in Aristotle Socrates Onassis, Peru may be taking on a man who not only has a superior navy but one who can outvote it in the United Nations.
